The figure consists of two vertically stacked dot plots. Both plots have 10 horizontal categories on the x-axis and 10 vertical grid lines on the y-axis, representing 1000 samples. In the top plot, each category contains approximately 100 dots, indicating a relatively uniform distribution. In the bottom plot, the first category contains almost all 1000 dots, while the other nine categories contain very few or no dots, indicating a highly skewed distribution.

A horizontal line with a series of identical, vertically aligned shapes attached to it. Each shape consists of a large loop at the top and a smaller, narrower loop below it, connected by a vertical line. The entire assembly is repeated eight times across the width of the page. A small, open rectangular bracket is positioned to the left of the first shape, spanning its width.

A horizontal row of twelve identical, thin, black, S-shaped loops, each consisting of two curved segments meeting at a sharp corner. The loops are evenly spaced and extend from the left edge of the frame towards the right, creating a sense of repetition and pattern.

A horizontal row of 12 identical, symmetrical, U-shaped loops arranged side-by-side. Each loop is composed of two curved segments meeting at a central vertical axis. The loops are evenly spaced and extend from approximately the left third of the image to the right two-thirds. They are rendered in a simple black line style on a white background.

A horizontal row of 12 identical, symmetrical, S-shaped curves. Each curve is formed by two straight segments and two curved segments, creating a shape that is wider at the top and narrower at the bottom. The curves are evenly spaced and aligned along a horizontal baseline.
